1	need people with CISSP or CISM	Aug 1, 2009 3:42 AM
2	The fact that a candidate may have the appropriate security certifications, does not necessarily mean that have the practical experience necessary to implement security solutions or programs. You need to spend the time to formulate your criteria for the type of candidate employee you require to meet your needs. Validate that the resume demonstrates the candidate has the practical experience to supplement the education + professional certifications. Then during the interview process, ask probing questions to ensure the candidate can articulate their practical experience effectively. Use scenarios to explore how they deal with a particular situation. Look for the candidate to demonstrate their working knowledge of a particular expertise or skill set you are particularly interested for this job. Don't just ask questions that regurgitate what is in the resume, take the time to prepare and don't be afraid to ask probing questions. The qualified candidate will appreciate the fact you took to the time to explore their knowledge base and expertise.	Jun 24, 2009 11:14 AM

121	There are numerous government contractors in the local area that have people with required experiece and several local colleges that graduate students with the required skillset.	Apr 16, 2009 7:43 AM
122	There are quite a few security and audit folks "on the street" currently. Many are either quite inexperienced, or have specific experiences that lend themselves to a level of "drone" that is not exactly attractive. Most of those folks come from larger enterprises. We avoid these folks as, well, we don't ever want to hear "It's not my job". THAT mentality and statement should NEVER be said by an (ISC)2 certified practitioner. Well, one would hope. 142	The downturn seems to be putting a lot of mediocre talent on the street rather than stars. They come with lower salary, but tend to demonstrate poorer performance.	Apr 16, 2009 6:54 AM
143	Information security is a broad field. The skill sets needed to cover all aspects vary significantly. People should really be able to specialize in certain areas (policy development, network security, training and awareness, risk management and business, host security, etc.) However, because information security teams are small, we've expected each person to be able to cover several large and important responsibilities. It is difficult to find people who are very good at devising, implementing and managing network security solutions who can also speak coherently in a board meeting with executives about multi-million dollar information security solutions that are needed to mitigate business risks. 42	Professionalism. More current knowledge.	Apr 21, 2009 5:37 PM
43	This is great point to choice the first professionals that will be interview by HR area and do the security tests and background check. I put the certified individuals in the first position to follow the verification process.	Apr 21, 2009 4:04 PM
44	Boot camps have negative impact on quality of skill sets. Rush to certify individuals in bulk has led to devaluation of certifications.	Apr 21, 2009 10:29 AM
45	Having a common vernacular is critical to understanding the nuances of security and privacy concerns.	Apr 21, 2009 9:33 AM
46	If available, I would have selected "Mostly," over Yes or No. Information security certification, especially the CISSP, indicates at least exposure and minimal understanding of security as a system of controls and an assessment of risk, rather than the simply a technology issue.	Apr 21, 2009 8:29 AM
47	At least it demonstrates a knowledge base for security.	Apr 21, 2009 6:54 AM
48	The lack of certification don't not mean less interested in improving security, and just because you have certification don't mean you have a security mindset (security mindset = thinking creativitly about security solutions/problems)	Apr 21, 2009 2:20 AM

192	I believe truly that when someone certifies their educational and professional development, they are a bit more serious about their career and what they do for a living. Otherwise, the IT Security or Audit person tends to be a bit less concerned about their role within their company and their actually work quality..and more concerned about a J.O.B. Certified folks tend to be VERY in tune with their Security Careers and have a better handle on the latest and most recent happenings. As PROACTIVE needs to not just be a mantra but a way we live our lives, well, proactivity is a part of a CISSP!	Apr 16, 2009 7:42 AM
193	Better overall knowledge	Apr 16, 2009 7:41 AM
194	In my view, certified professionals have greater credibility and exposure to both IT and information security.	Apr 16, 2009 7:40 AM
195	Having an broad yet relatively detailed overview of Computer Security via say the CISSP certification guarentees that certified individuals have the ability to succeed in their chosen fields and careers.	Apr 16, 2009 7:35 AM
196	Usually a certified professional is a better contributor, but not always. Experience is usually a big factor as well, simply having book knowledge still puts someone behind the curve.	Apr 16, 2009 7:33 AM
197	Non-certified people often have experience as network admins, engineers, or user support. They have some abilities with IT Security. Certified people simply have devoted the time an brainpower to understand what IT Security really is, and how best to help a client achieve a higher level of security. You can take that to the bank. Also, having certified people gets us more contracts.	Apr 16, 2009 7:32 AM
198	Knowledge is power, certification only certifies the knowledge. If I had to choose between talent and certification alone, I would choose talent.	Apr 16, 2009 7:30 AM

210	It gives us a baseline to help understand the individual's expertise or level of understanding.	Apr 16, 2009 7:15 AM
211	It's nice when people have a common background-- it helps in communication. I don't think certification is essential, but I like to see it when I'm hiring.	Apr 16, 2009 7:11 AM
212	Additional knowledge.	Apr 16, 2009 7:09 AM
213	Good baseline of knowledge	Apr 16, 2009 7:06 AM
214	Certified individuals have a better understanding of security because of the training they have had.	Apr 16, 2009 7:06 AM
215	We are much more effective as a security team when we all share a common body of knowledge and adhere to continued professional development standards.	Apr 16, 2009 7:04 AM
216	Certified by ISC(2)? Those folks typically do contribute to better security. Security+ certs aren't worth anything that I can see (besides that the individual was willing to make a modest investment in a bootcamp to teach them the test).	Apr 16, 2009 7:04 AM
217	Certifications show at least some knowledge in the area where they will be working. It is not a defining factor, however, since certifications can be all paper (head knowledge) based and not experience based.	Apr 16, 2009 7:02 AM
218	Broader knowledge base	Apr 16, 2009 7:00 AM

Page 6, Q5. Do certified individuals contribute to better security?

219	I think the answer is, "That Depends". There are certified individuals who are certified because they are good at taking tests. There are others who are certified because they are good at what they do.	Apr 16, 2009 6:56 AM
220	They understand how an effective security program works and how it is managed.	Apr 16, 2009 6:56 AM
221	Certification only provides a perception of legitimacy, but doesn't contribute to better security.	Apr 16, 2009 6:54 AM

225	better able to understand the complexities	Apr 16, 2009 6:48 AM
226	Yes, however there are many individuals that contribute that are not certified. The certification, to me means they applied themselves to something and accomplished their goal.	Apr 16, 2009 6:45 AM
227	No necessarily. However, it does stack the odds in your favor during the hiring process.	Apr 16, 2009 6:39 AM
228	They demonstrate a better understanding of the field.	Apr 16, 2009 6:38 AM
229	It proves they know security concepts and a solid understanding. However, there are some non-certified individuals that are very sharp on security	Apr 16, 2009 6:37 AM
230	It proved that the individual has taken effort to keep him/herself updated with the relevant skillset.	Apr 16, 2009 6:36 AM
231	The certification is not necessarily proof that a candidate knows their stuff, but it is an indication that they have demonstrated some ability. We lend greater weight to some certs over others.	Apr 16, 2009 6:36 AM
232	No direct correlation	Apr 16, 2009 6:34 AM
233	Provides a better sense of requisite knowledge is present in the candidate.	Apr 16, 2009 6:33 AM
234	Depending on the cert, they tend to understand how the system/OS works or in the case of CISSPs how processes work.	Apr 16, 2009 6:25 AM necessary background to perform the job functions.

239	Their knowledge is usually more upto date	Apr 16, 2009 6:12 AM
240	I find that certified personnel have at least a baseline knowledge of security. they may not have depth but at least they can be trained without a great deal of expense, most of the time. Those withput certifications, such as the CISSP, may be able to perform but most of the time if they do not have a the certification it is becasue the knowledge is not there to allow them to pass the test or they have an attitude. Either way they are not as well received as cerified people.	Apr 16, 2009 6:11 AM

245	I use technical and security-related certifications as a tool in the decision process when selecting from candidates with similar levels of experience.	Apr 16, 2009 6:03 AM
246	You can assume a minimum level of knowledge.	Apr 16, 2009 6:00 AM
247	Certifications does not always imply that the individual will follow the security policies. Many times, credentials are acquired for an increase in salary and most of the time the individuals with the credentials have passed the tests, but have minimal practical experience applying the knowledge.	Apr 16, 2009 6:00 AM
248	In the infrastructure everyone is at minimum ITIL foundation certified. In diciplines people are expected to pursue professional development.	Apr 16, 2009 6:00 AM
249	By becoming certified they have proven that they understand and can apply the priniciples required for good security	Apr 16, 2009 5:59 AM

	practices and concepts in the day-to-day job
278	Better awareness. More knowledgeable.	Apr 16, 2009 4:56 AM
279	It's a proof of their knowledge which makes the individual much "easier to sell"	Apr 16, 2009 4:54 AM
280	Ability to at least have a base line understanding of security and its benefits	Apr 16, 2009 4:51 AM
281	The already have the security mindset	Apr 16, 2009 4:45 AM
282	More rounded, better foundation	Apr 16, 2009 4:39 AM
283	It depends on age and attitude and culture. Some cultures see certification as a ticket to a job; others see it as an acknowledgement of experience. This ties in to age and attitude toward technology and society. People out of military/LE are less focused on technology; "geeks" think its all about the technology.	Apr 16, 2009 4:35 AM
284	Certified individual have sufficient knowledge in the relevant area of their certification. Nobody will challenge your decision if the wrong candidate was hired.	Apr 16, 2009 4:30 AM
285	I'm more certain of their comprehensive knowledge of security and their ability to think of all the security impacts rather than a narrow set of them.	Apr 16, 2009 4:23 AM
286	Depending on the certification, it could be better global understanding which is essential for my incident handlers, or it could mean better specific knowledge in, for example, malware analysis, which is something my tech analysts need. Certification provides an additional level of assurance that the candidate can walk the talk.	Apr 16, 2009 4:22 AM
287	Base level of guaranteed knowledge	Apr 16, 2009 4:20 AM
288	Cartified individuals have a better understanding of the complexities of large systems, specifically the interdependencies of "security" technologies and how they work against the threats.	Apr 16, 2009 4:16 AM
289	It depends. Certifications don't make a person a better worker.	Apr 16, 2009 4:11 AM
290	As a certified professional in a group of mostly non-certified, those certified especially with SANS Gold level certifications show they did not fake their way into their positions.	Apr 16, 2009 4:10 AM
291	Certification provides both support of salary ranges presented to HR when creating new positions and a baseline understanding of a candidate's knowledge and skillsets prior to interview.	Apr 16, 2009 4:09 AM
292	Not all the time.	Apr 16, 2009 4:08 AM

302	They have a common understanding of best practise security framework.	Apr 16, 2009 2:55 AM
303	More knowledgable	Apr 16, 2009 2:52 AM
304	Many people have certs but still no clue. The cert might get them in for an interview, but it doesn't get them hired. Only clue does.	Apr 16, 2009 2:50 AM
305	OSSTMM certified and SANS certified seem to be the best.	Apr 16, 2009 2:39 AM
306	Knowledge is power	Apr 16, 2009 2:37 AM
307	In theory, yes. Per my answer to Q4 above, I view certifications as somewhat favorable, but still interview the person as fully as any other - perhaps more so, to see if their certification is valid, or just paper.	Apr 16, 2009 2:37 AM
308	Certifications by themselves do not always make people better. It depends on the individual. Experience, initiative and drive coupled with certification makes the real difference.	Apr 16, 2009 2:12 AM
309	There is the ongoing obligation to remain current and update their CBK	Apr 16, 2009 2:07 AM

316	Better knowledge leads to better decisions	Apr 16, 2009 1:29 AM
317	Better understanding of terminology	Apr 16, 2009 1:10 AM
318	Better understanding of the threats and coutermeasures	Apr 16, 2009 12:59 AM
319	They are aware of best practice and generally more knowledgeable and ethical than others	Apr 16, 2009 12:59 AM

Page 6, Q5. Do certified individuals contribute to better security?

320	They can usually be trusted to work unsupervised	Apr 16, 2009 12:58 AM
321	Certified individuals in this part of the world have better knowledge and exposure.	Apr 16, 2009 12:58 AM
322	Because, in 90% of case who is certificate is also right formed and competent.	Apr 16, 2009 12:50 AM
323	It is easy to say what you have done. But I like to have prove that they have basic knowledge proven by certificates	Apr 16, 2009 12:49 AM
324	fundamental security basics is understood	Apr 16, 2009 12:40 AM
325	Certified knowledge of best practice	Apr 16, 2009 12:39 AM
326	This is not really a yes/no answer. Certification serves a a purpose in that it ensures a certain baseline for knowledge. It also indicates that the person is interested in improving their skills and improving their knowledge of security.	Apr 16, 2009 12:39 AM
327	Broader knowledge base coming in - much less learning curve.	Apr 16, 2009 12:38 AM
328	Confirms they understand the concepts and have the knowledge to execute the job to standard.	Apr 16, 2009 12:28 AM
329	usually because it indicates genuine enthusiasm for the subject	Apr 16, 2009 12:26 AM
330	They buy into the whole ethics trying to promote it like if they are a new moral citizen. Not all people though.	Apr 16, 2009 12:19 AM
331	The fundamental subject knowledge and approach towards security will be improved if a person goes for certification. However my experience is that people "get certified" for the sake of it and/or to add it in their resume. Availability of the brain dumps in teh internet also has degraded the value of Information Security certifications. I remeber that I had to prepare for many months before I took CISSP exam eight years ago and nowadays people beat the questions by referring to the question bank, forums etc	Apr 16, 2009 12:18 AM
332	Better organization of practical knowledge and focus on security approach	Apr 16, 2009 12:12 AM
333	At least ground know-how is there	Apr 16, 2009 12:02 AM
334	Knowledge of structure and methods	Apr 16, 2009 12:01 AM
335	A certification is seen as validation of the experience on the candidates' CVs	Apr 15, 2009 11:51 PM
336	keeping up to date the knowledge and following international criteria	Apr 15, 2009 11:51 PM
337	They have displayed a level of knowledge by achieving certification. Valuable knowledge and resources can also be used due to the membership to professional organisations.	Apr 15, 2009 11:06 PM
338	There are exceptions, but usually certifications demonstrate a certain level of skill.	Apr 15, 2009 11:05 PM
339	Solid background in CBK forms a basis for applying security to real world	Apr 15, 2009 10:43 PM

345	Credibility	Apr 15, 2009 9:28 PM
346	Certification in itself is not indicative of contribution.	Apr 15, 2009 9:19 PM
347	If establishes their credibility both internally and externally.	Apr 15, 2009 9:17 PM
348	they can, but I think that certification must be taken and used in conjunction with experience. There are people who are not certified but contribute more than certified people and have more experience.	Apr 15, 2009 9:03 PM
349	CCIE, CISSP	Apr 15, 2009 8:53 PM
350	this question should have a "it depends" answer because it depends on the experience of the individual combined with the certification.	Apr 15, 2009 8:48 PM
351	It helps prove competency.	Apr 15, 2009 8:37 PM
352	Domain knowledge	Apr 15, 2009 8:27 PM
353	They possess a baseline knowledge and credibility that can be increased by internal methods.	Apr 15, 2009 8:27 PM
354	Simply due to the shared lexicon. I can speak to a fellow certified individual more clearly than a very security smart layman.	Apr 15, 2009 8:12 PM
355	Reflects dedication to the profession and a better understanding of security.	Apr 15, 2009 8:08 PM
356	Shows at least some breadth.	Apr 15, 2009 8:00 PM
357	Mostly, yes. Their knowledge and expertise is usually better structured but the impact to overall security still varies and can not be directly tied to certain certificate.	Apr 15, 2009 7:55 PM
358	You have a solid baseline of knowledge and skills.	Apr 15, 2009 7:54 PM
359	Somewhat more versed in basic security principles	Apr 15, 2009 7:52 PM
360	At least when I tell them what they need to do, i can refer back to something they learned when studying for CISSP, SANS etc so they can get a better understanding of what I need	Apr 15, 2009 7:30 PM

Page 6, Q5. Do certified individuals contribute to better security?

361	Known minimum level of knowledge and continuing requirement to keep up to date.	Apr 15, 2009 7:24 PM
362	Certification lends to more credibility with clients. Many contracts have clauses that require these credentials. While not completely a gauge of a person's experience, credentials identify that individuals have a basic and sometimes a thorough understanding of foundational concepts and best practices to get the job done right the first time, saving time and money.	Apr 15, 2009 7:20 PM
363	People who are certified have at least been exposed to the common areas of security and system administration.	Apr 15, 2009 7:11 PM
364	It usually shows that a person is at least interested in that field of study and that they took an initiative to get that far. The person's personality and willingness to continue to learn and ability to work on a team play a huge factor as well.	Apr 15, 2009 6:57 PM

232	Again, certifications are pretty much meaningless in today's hiring market. Recruiters love them because they can search on them, but as a hiring manager I see too many certified people that simply have no idea what they're talking about. This especially applies to CISSP's. The #1 missing element is the ability to identify, understand and measure risk and threats. This is followed closely by #2, the inability to develop effective strategies for either avoiding or managing risk. Candidates only seem to understand the one-size-fits-all compliance approach to security instead of a risk based approach. I'm going to write another book just on that topic I think. 403	It depends on the role. It depends n the age. In audiiting the CISA is needed just to show the work meets the requirements of external audit. Now that the CISSP has become 'recognised' it has also become devalued. Its clear from many job descriptions that managers don't understand what it is and so applicant see it as just another hurdle to getting a job. I attributed the falling recognition of (ISC)'s decision to allow "students" to sit for exam, going down the way of Microsoft paper-certificate. Hong Kong actively promote this as just another "cert". You can now have a "value meal" deal with CISSP+CISA+whatever packages of courses. Does this sounds professional to you ? There isn't much of a sophisticated IT Security industry in Hong Kong, certainly no deep technical knowhow to speak of. Yet, they have probably 3 times more CISSPs than that of Australia. The training I am planning in taking thsi year I may have to pay for out of my own pocket, so it will need to be local or I will have go out of pocket for travel expenses as well. Any help in local training could be beneficial to all members. I have also suggested to my company that we have many people with certifications that need continuing education credits and it may be a big benefit to purchase in house training to help keep the costs in line with budgets. Might be somethign to pursue from your side in terms of propogating ISC2 training.	Apr 16, 2009 8:35 AM
76	I am currently unemployed assisting my parents in their 80's, so most of the answers to the survey probably aren't usefully because they are not applicable to my disabled Veteran status which has become significantly worse (immobile). Lack of ability to live in an area where there is job availability, I believe, prevents me from obtaining employment; here or, even if I lived near Wash DC where my TS/SCI clearance is a plus, is held back by my age. Numerous applications for positions I'm well qualified for result in nothing, not even a reply, I think my age and VA status have a big impact on this process.
